

BEST OF THE CITY

SERVICE

DRY CLEANER

Dry Cleaning Station
Multiple Locations
www.ecodrycleaner.com

In the quest for clean duds, there's no need to contaminate yourself or the environment—or to empty your wallet, for that matter. This eco-friendly local dry-cleaning chain ditched toxic PERC (a chemical that's still used by most cleaners today; it's been linked to nervous system, kidney, and liver problems) in favor of GreenEarth, a safer cleaning formula made from liquid silicone that doesn't take a toll on human health. And what's the price for such peace of mind? Not much, it turns out. Blouses are just $6.95 to clean, and you can even rack up discounts by getting your friends on the shop's bandwagon. Pickup and delivery? They're free. The business also backs up its do-goodery with some tidy credentials: It's Portland's only dry cleaner to have won the award of excellence from the Fabricare Institute (a respected garment-care trade association) for its high standards of cleaning, environmental stewardship, and customer service.

From the August, 2008 issue of Portland Monthly. Visit them online at www.portlandmonthlymag.com.